His gift for satire was channelled from Philadelphia, also named Nazz, led by rising star into hit anthems including 'School's Out', 'Elected', and Todd Rundgren. Furnier's band had used other names 'No More Mr. Nice Guy'. And on stage he was a master back in Phoenix, first The Earwigs, then The Spiders. The name appealed to Furnier's wry sense of humour. It sounded, in his words, "like some sweet little old lady who made cookies for everybody." It was so perfectly wrong for a band of longhaired rockers playing loud rock'n'roll. And as Furnier quickly realised, it was also perfectly suited to something else he had in mind.
